

Graduating Class of 2001

On June 4, Swarthmore College awarded 337 degrees to 332 graduates. About a third of the students earned Honors, the largest proportion ever, and a jump of about 7 percentage points over last year's class. The number of students earning Honors has been increasing steadily since Distinction in Course was discontinued in 1997. (See historical data presented on last page of this summary.)

Most of the graduates (92%) had entered Swarthmore in the Fall of 1997.* Another 7% had entered in 1996. Consistent with recent years, 55% of the graduates were women. A third were members of minority groups, and 5% were non-resident aliens. Over a third (37%) of the majors were in the Social Sciences, 28% were in the Natural Sciences and Engineering, 26% were in the Arts & Humanities, and 9% were in majors that crossed divisions, Education or non-"regularized" Special Majors.

* This should not be confused with our "graduation rate," which is the proportion of the entering cohort that graduates in a specified period of time. In Fall 1997, 373 students entered as first-year students. By 2001, 83% had graduated. The 83% represents our most recent four-year graduation rate.
